

man's name as it was wrong to insert into an unfortunate scene. According to our laws he deserves to be sentenced to death. General L'apin, given into his letter. Here, madam, read this. The lady trembled exceedingly. Napoleon immediately took the letter from her hand, tore it, and threw the fragments into the fire. "I have no other proof against Prince Hatzfeld, madam, therefore he is at liberty." He ordered me immediately to remove him from his confinement at headquarters. I acknowledged that I had not sent him there; but he did not reproach me; he even seemed pleased at what I had done.

"In this affair Hertler, Duror, and Chastanet behaved as they did on all occasions, that is to say, like gallant men; Hertler's conduct was particularly praiseworthy."

"No sooner had Prince Hatzfeld returned to his family than he was made acquainted with all that had passed. He wrote me a letter expressive of his gratitude, and the emotions by which he was agitated" (Memoirs of General Kapp, p. 107; see also Sturz, tome II. p. 314).
